

THE GRAND OUTING OF THE WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION

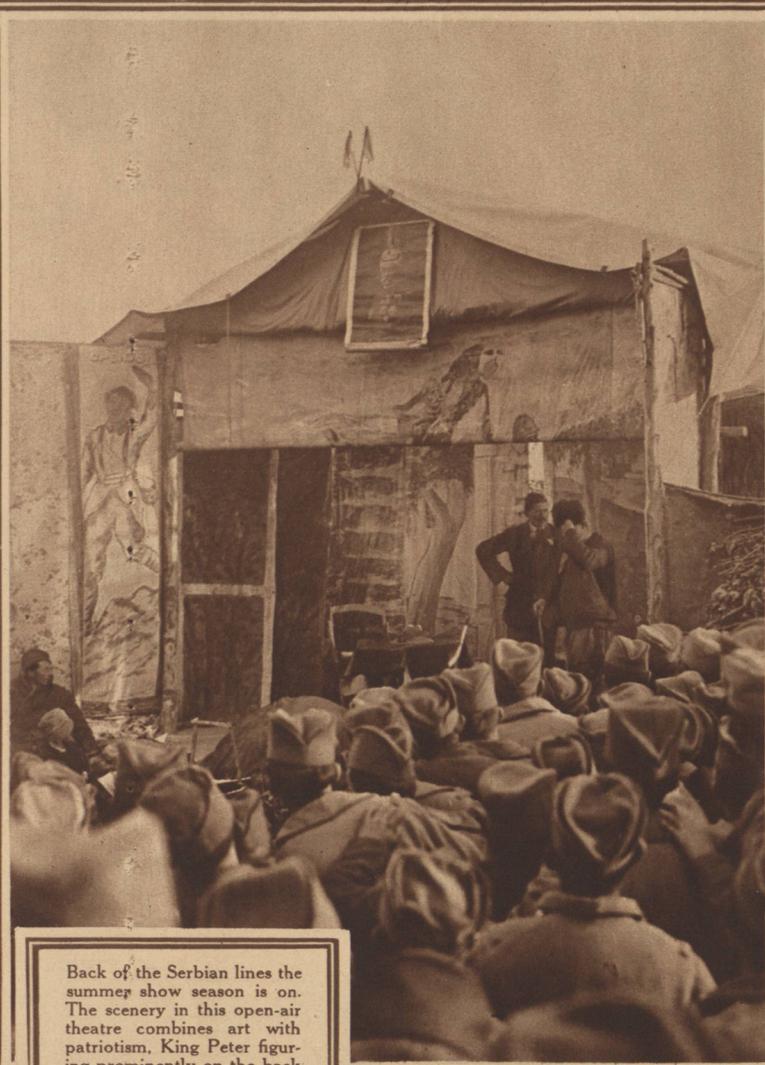

This remarkable photograph shows a section of the reviewing stand at the Fourth of July parade in New York. At first glance it seems to be Mayor Hylan and Commissioner Enright's official stand, but a close inspection of the picture will detect the all-pervading and genial spirit of William Randolph Hearst, arising from a basket of daisies. In the background are a few of the pleasure-loving members of Congress, who were beneficiaries of the Hearst Fresh Air Fund to the extent of being brought to New York on all-steel Pullmans and shown life for one wonderful day—all free of charge. Mr. Hearst admits that a good time was had by all.

Back of the Serbian lines the summer show season is on. The scenery in this open-air theatre combines art with patriotism. King Peter figuring prominently on the back drop. Underwood & Underwood.

So low is Austria's supply of material that the uniforms are taken from those who have been killed, and are fumigated, later to be made into new uniforms. The process of fumigation is shown here.

This picture was brought out of Russia by an English nurse, who recently made her escape via Siberia and this country. It shows a member of what was the Russian army, putting his new-found freedom to use in tearing the upholstery out of the furniture belonging to a wealthy countryman. There was no particular grudge against the owner, but the exhilaration of being suddenly free took expression in tearing the backs out of sofas in a frenzied search for hidden treasure.
