

With mines under their feet. The Canadians found Cambrai intact—till it blew up and burned about their ears, as the Germans planned, with their infernal machines.

© Canadian Official, Underwood & Underwood

The "high water mark of the German drive." Here, at Westoutre Church, the Franco-British stood "with their backs to the wall."

© British Official, Western Newspaper Union

Lille's little "Victory Carnival." Greeting their deliverer, Tommy Atkins, with flowers, flags and cheers after four years of Kultur.

© British Official, Underwood & Underwood

Unconditional surrender of the cootie. He waited till the war was nearly over to do it, too. One of Uncle Sam's steam sterilizers, with soldiers waiting to have their clothes "evacuated."

© Committee on Public Information, Gillman Service

No, he is not threatening Marie Dressler. The "cop" is dancing to the spirit of the United War Work Campaign.

Paul Thompson