

A few charter members of the Peacemakers' Club. A famous Royal Air Force squadron, every pilot and observer having to his credit at least three Boche machines.

Associated Illustration Agencies, Ltd.

Well, what is there to say about a picture like this? It speaks for itself. Strum-strum! Now, doesn't it?

Yes, life has certainly been turned upside down in Russia. This fellow was once an officer in the Czar's army. Now he's a moving man.

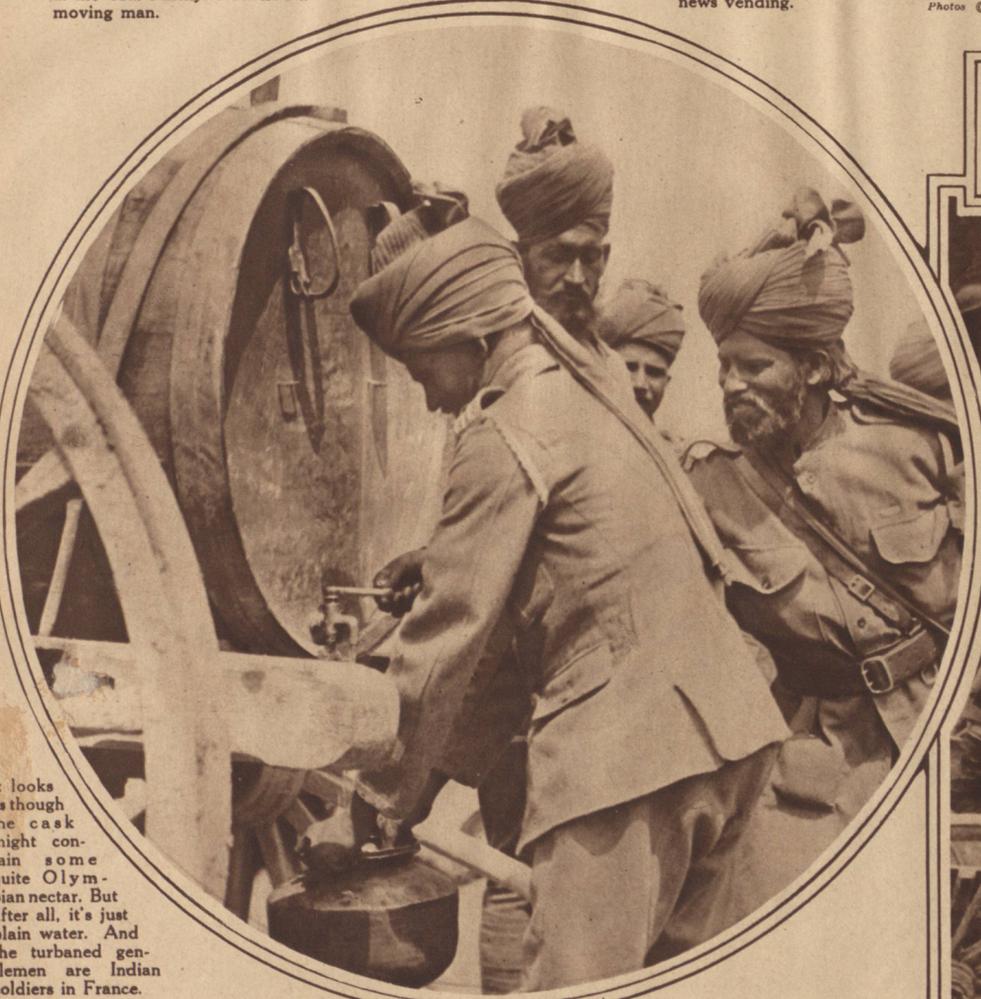

And this youth was a student in the university. Now he's taken out a license and is hitting up a brisk trade in news vending.

Photos © Underwood & Underwood.

Two neat little problems in reconstruction. Study them closely and then make up your mind which you'd rather tackle. (1) British Official, from Western Newspaper Union. (2) Associated Illustration Agencies.

It looks as though the cask might contain some quite Olympian nectar. But after all, it's just plain water. And the turbaned gentlemen are Indian soldiers in France.

British Official, from Western Newspaper Union.

