

All Paris turns out to celebrate the greatest epoch in the history of Alsace-Lorraine: liberation from Hun rule. These Alsacians have dressed up in their Sunday best and come out to help make the demonstration in their honor an unforgettable occasion. In the background is an appropriate symbol: the Arc de Triomphe. —Photo by Moussault.

Munich, in the throes of revolution, is like Petrograd. No one can tell what will happen next. This picture shows the greeting given the troops of the Bavarian republic. —Photo by H. Hoffman.

Spa, Belgium. A corner of Von Hindenburg's dugout at Great Headquarters. The fan seems eloquent, even in disuse. It reminds us of the not distant day when it got too hot at Spa for the Old Man of the Lakes. —Committee on Public Information

Just a passing throng on the Potsdamer Platz in Berlin, where the problem of idleness grows more menacing every day.

The fellow with "P. G." on his back is a German prisoner who was set to work sifting gravel for reconstruction work. Another "P. G." tried to hid behind the sieve when the camera man approached.

A revolutionary mass meeting held before the cathedral in Berlin. Mass meetings are much in vogue. It's all ever so much more interesting than a mere Kaiser. —Photo by R. Bennecker.
