

BEFORE
Here we see the Crown Prince, first as he looks to-day tramping along the

When "England's Greatest Soldier," General Haig, arrived in London the whole town turned out to honor him. The streets were packed with wildly cheering crowds. This picture was taken at Charing Cross.

© Western Newspaper Union

When Haig landed at Dover he was formally received by the town clerk, who read an address of welcome. This scene is shown on the right.

The funeral of Major General J. Franklin Bell. From Governor's Island to the Pennsylvania Station the body was given military escort. The general's horse was led directly behind the coffin.

© Underwood & Underwood

These Parisian youngsters stood side by side with the poilus along the thoroughfares of Paris and took this method of showing President Wilson how glad they were to see him. Below we visit the Paris housetops, where clinging room is at a premium.

Gillians Service, Underwood & Underwood

(Above) Sir Douglas Haig—the first picture taken out of uniform. He is dressed for a game of golf, and one is offered an interesting contrast to the gentleman in the picture just above.

© Western Newspaper Union

Oh, yes, the Mr. Hohenzollern is still on deck. The oval shows him (marked X) pacing the platform of a railroad station in Holland, while the picture on the right gives us a glimpse of the fallen Kaiser strolling in the garden of Amerongen.

Photos by Moussault.

All ready for Palm Beach. The very latest type of sport costume, with skirt of Fan-ta-si, from Abercrombie & Fitch. It is worn by Florence Fair.

