

HOME SWEET HOME

In far off Macedonia thousands of unhappy women and children, driven out of their homes by the war, are slowly returning to familiar and beloved haunts. The most is made of what crude carts and wagons are available. The rest must walk but—they are homeward bound!

© Central News.

It's an old, old story. This Belgian woman, who refused to work in an enemy munition plant, was carried to Germany and forced to work on the land. Freed at last, she is nearing home, foot-weary but rejoicing.

Canadian Official, © Western Newspaper Union.

A year may be an age, four years an eternity. These miserable refugees have been in the land of the foe since the outbreak of the war. Now they are being brought back to peace and safety.

British Official, from Feature Photo Service.

Whether the old house with its precious belongings will be found awaiting them at the end of their long, long journey is very doubtful. But hope still flutters in hearts which have stood the cruellest tests of adversity.

Feature Photo Service

Age is no protection when it is a question of German militarism. Yes, this infirm French couple had to work, along with so many others, when the Hun machine swept down. But the long nightmare is ended.

© Western Newspaper Union.