

New photographs of two of the supermen at the peace table. GEORGES CLEMENCEAU (left), Premier of France and Chairman of the Supreme Council of the Peace Conference. DAVID LLOYD GEORGE (right), Premier of Great Britain.

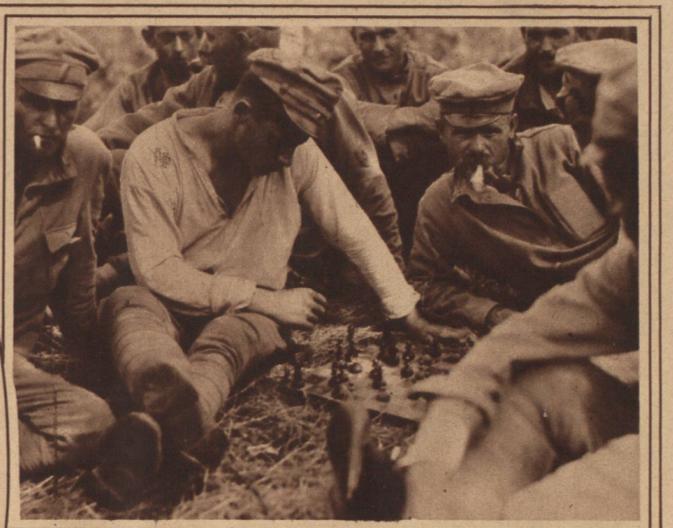

Photo by Hoppe

Photo
by Press Illustrating

Having fought under the two glorious red, white and blue flags stuck in his pack, this Yank is being registered by embarkation officers at St. Nazaire before going aboard a transport that will carry him home.

Underwood & Underwood

With the Czecho-Slovaks on the Siberian front it's chess. You'd probably have to take a census of the whole U. S. A. to corral as many chess-playing doughboys as you'd find in a single platoon of these Czecho-Slovaks.

Gilliam Service

"Uncle Joe" Kerman, a loyal worker for the Knights of Columbus, gives material assistance to this travel-worn French youth, a refugee from south of Sedan, on his arrival at the American lines.

Underwood & Underwood

While the war is over as far as actual fighting goes, the boys in the Engineers' and the Motor Transport corps are just as active as ever. Supplies must still be moved. On the left an army freight train and on the right an army truck, both bringing up from a base of supplies in France our doughboys' necessities of life.

Gilliam Service