

Like the Pied Piper of old, the band of the 165th Infantry of the Army of Occupation—New York's "Fighting Sixty-ninth"—swings into the square of a small Rhenish town, accompanied by an enthusiastic guard of briskly marching kiddies. Children the world over will rally to music, and these little foemen find in the gay tunes of the New York boys an irresistible charm. The 165th and the entire Rainbow Division is scheduled to sail for home in April, together with the 77th, and Fifth Avenue will again witness a tremendous demonstration of welcome when the "Fighting Irish" and "Fighting Tailors" hold their triumphal parade.

International Film Service.

"African golf," the greatest of all indoor and outdoor sports—more familiarly known as "craps." A group of Yanks of the American Army of Occupation rolling the bones in Germany. According to all reports, a larger part of our doughboys' time when not actually shooting the boche was put in "shooting the works."

Keystone View.

A unique photograph just received in America of a fat sausage American observation balloon, anchored with many cables to the checkerboard of French soil far below. Above the basket proudly floats Old Glory. With so large and stationary a target for the Hun incendiary bullets, small wonder that the life of a balloon observer was filled with exciting hazards.

Keystone View.