

Red Cross nurses in the Frankfurter Allee bind up the wounded in the midst of the havoc wrought in a recent Spartacan riot in Berlin.

Miss Sylvia Borden, of England, firmly strapped into the "Guardian Angel" parachute apparatus, with which she made three daring descents in London recently. Note how the parachute is carried in its circular case away from the side of the basket so as to permit a clear "get away." Left—Miss Borden coming down safely, by means of her aerial "lifebelt."

Two of the famous Australian Woodchoppers troupe from the "Circus Colossal" take an afternoon off to fell a veteran New York tree after the most approved Australian fashion.

Tribute from one army to another. A doughboy makes his offering to the fund of the Woman's Land Army, raised in their drive on the Avenue a week ago for the purchase of their up-state farm.

Admiral Sims, U. S. N., from a picture taken in England before sailing for home on the Mauretania. The Admiral wears an original and successful good luck decoration for his homeward voyage.

An unusual window display in a Berlin store is this government battery commander, directing his men opposite on the Place Alexander during a Spartacan uprising.

Major General Hugh L. Scott, with his daughter-in-law and Mrs. Scott, dedicates a beautiful tree to the memory of his son, Lieutenant Colonel Scott, at the Camp Dix Arbor Day ceremonies.

The genuinely popular tenor, John McCormack, who to-night at the Hippodrome, in the last of this season's Sunday concerts, will sing that tuneful hit, "When You Look in the Heart of a Rose."

Chinese coolies haul the baggage of German and Austrian enemy aliens to the wharves of Shanghai. The land of the celestials is rapidly ridding itself of the enemy propagandists who carried on their insidious campaign during the war.

Secretary of the Treasury Carter Glass hoists the first Victory Loan flag, banner of the fifth and last of our Liberty Loans, over the United States Treasury. The members of the Federal Reserve Board line the first row of spectators.
