

The S. S. Patricia of the German merchant fleet at anchor in the English Channel. A U. S. submarine chaser is about to put aboard an American crew to bring her to this country. The Patricia made a safe landing in Boston last week with a cargo of Yanks, after being unsuccessfully fired at sea by an agent of the Hamburg-American Line. Central News

One of the war's smallest heroes, awarded the D. S. C. by Gen. Pershing, is Cher Ami. In spite of the loss of an eye this homing pigeon succeeded in carrying to headquarters mess ages from the "Lost Battalion."

International Film
Right — A British dirigible that carries its own aeroplane, which launches itself in the air. The plane proved invaluable during the war to the slower ship in fighting off enemy machines from their huge prey.

A steel sea monster, amphibious and formidable, is Uncle Sam's newest submarine just home from war duty. The great fin rudders stabilize the boat under water and assist in speedy submerging. They fold up snugly against the sides when the "sub." is under way. Several of these new "O" type submarines are making their initial New York appearance in the Naval Review. Keystone View

Capt. Alan Buchanon, commanding Flotilla I of the destroyer fleet, wearing the new style uniform high choker collar replaced by the more comfortable style affected by the British. International Film

Left — Real war dogs from Belgium, veteran machine gun teams of the great war, arrive with Belgian soldiers to take active part in the Victory Loan campaign throughout the country. International Film

Winding in a long, attenuated tail behind Old Glory and the regimental colors, the 31st Infantry, U. S. A., marches on a practice hike through the bleak Siberian countryside around Vladivostok. Signal Corps, U. S. A.

Hundreds of "Hello" girls pour into the street from the Tremont Temple, in Boston, after a mass meeting of New England's telephone girls. Their strike against the Bursleson régime seriously tied up the wires of the New England states. Underwood