

A Page of International Pets Humble Representatives of Nations

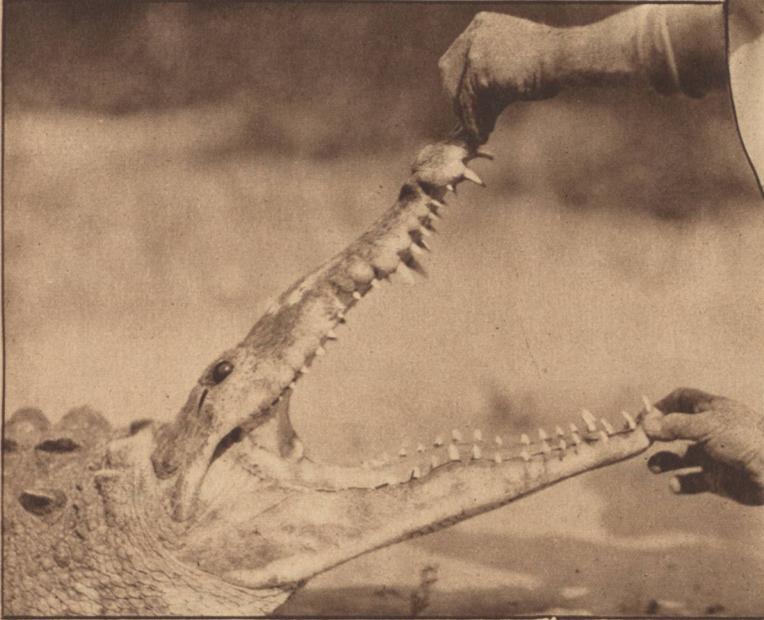

Any small child with generous grown-up relatives may get a goat in Regent's Park, London, and drive proudly—albeit a trifle fearfully—in a luxurious turnout like this, to the admiration and envy of less fortunate friends. Western Newspaper Union

Right—Values are sometimes in inverse proportion to size. This rare pocket edition of the species canine is Fujiyama, Japanese chin dog, height four inches, and weight one pound—and he calls San Francisco his home town. International Film Service

Left—An equine gentleman inhabitant of a British racing stable exchanges a thoroughbred greeting over the gate of his stall with her ladyship in the next box, stretching his long, glossy neck and pointing his ears in friendly interest. W. N. U.

Carrier pigeons of German aviators rode in snug quarters on the side of the plane until released. The carrier pigeons of the conflict were among the real heroes of the war. Underwood & Underwood

Not from the Nile, but a resident of the sunny shores of Florida. A dental exhibition in the ample jaws of one of our own crocodiles. He would shed his famous tears in a real cause should a toothache rage among the formidable array of near-tusks. Gilliams Service

Cognac is French and wears a gold stripe for loyal service with the 71st Artillery. He now holds the proud post of mascot for the Friars Club. Cognac will fight at the drop of a hat—if it is a German helmet—a stunt he is performing daily to boost the Loan.

Ever since she was born Sally has earned a good living by acting in moving pictures. She has watched the camera man and now decides to try her skill at taking "stills," holding the machine carefully in her long, uncanny hands. Sally's intelligence, rather than her apish beauty, should bring her success. Keystone View

This mammoth elephant car, seventy-five feet high, lives in Mandalay and plays a principal role in the elaborate funerals with which Burma pays homage to its dignitaries of the church. The coffin of a Buddhist archbishop is being hoisted to the pagoda which the elephant carries on its back and the ponderous creature will roll majestically through the crowded streets to the cemetery like a float at a gala carnival. Underwood & Underwood

A charming little Boepeep from England, with a regular Mother Goose crook and the leggiest of lambs. It is truly a spring lamb, as the too loose coat of wool and outrageously long legs attest, but by the end of the season it will graduate into the mutton class. Keystone View