

He works for $15 a week and saves it all! E. T. Hal-loway, an oil salesman, of Washington, D. C., who lives in a tent adjoining his office. A highly productive truck patch gives him an ample vegetarian diet and brings him enough profit to buy the foodstuffs he cannot raise.

Left—Can you register despair, disgust, exasperation and resignation all at the same time? This man can. He's been trying for fifteen minutes to get a telephone number.

Not a cubist painting of a "Nude Descending a Staircase," but a most unusual photo of what was probably the inspiration for the tin hat worn by our overseas troops—the massive spiked helmet of the Goddess of Liberty as viewed from an aeroplane flying directly above the famous statue.

Right—The 18-year-old princess, daughter of the Sultan of Jolo, and Miss Carmen Aguinaldo, daughter of the former Filipino bandit—two popular University of Illinois students.

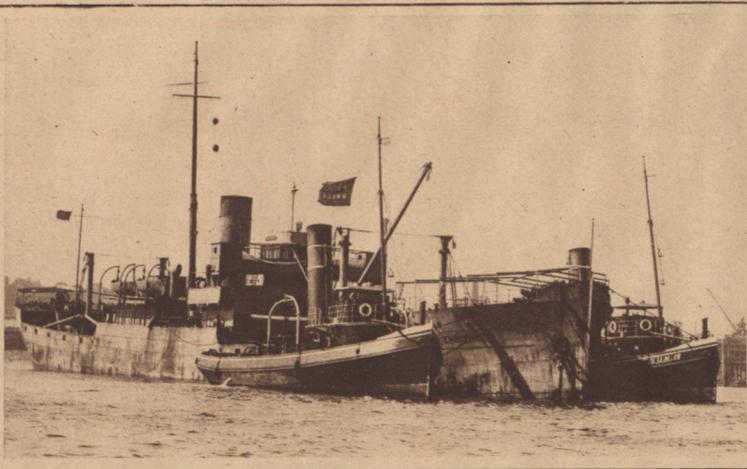

When a Brooklyn store recently held a sale of army shoes the line formed early and was over three blocks long. This corporal, with his year and a half overseas record, knew from experience what genuine wear was to be had from army shoes, and invested all his ready funds in six pairs.

Athletics of all kinds, and particularly aquatics, have had a great revival in Germany. Here is a photograph taken during a recent "cross-Berlin" swimming race for women.

All out for the hundred yard dash! A quintet of sprinters from the British Black Sea army competing at the army championships at Aldershot, outside of London, last month. These dusky, long-haired athletes compete in their bare feet.

The Englewood, new American steel cargo steamer, narrowly escaped sinking recently after striking a mine at the mouth of the Thames, en route from New York to Rotterdam. Wireless calls brought two British tugs to the rescue, and they are shown towing the disabled freighter into port.

Left—Our Beau Brummel Ambassador, Brand Whitlock, of Brussels, Belgium, and Toledo, Ohio. Mr. Whitlock has recently been offered the Italian ambassadorship.

It was a bigger, brighter and better Labor Day carnival down at the Fox Hills hospital for the wounded, S. I. The three wheel-chair prize winners—Vampire, Harem Lady and Chink.
