

Ernestine Myers, who, early in November, is planning to fascinate Keith audiences in a programme of unusual modern and classical dances.
Photo by Alfred Chesney Johnson

Charming Ruth Chatterton has found in George Scarborough's comedy, "Moonshine and Honeysuckle," now running at the Henry Miller Theatre, a play admirably suited to her engaging personality.
Photo by Demeyer

Pretty Miss Marjory Hast, daughter of Walter Hast, the producer of "Scandal," who plays a small but effective part in that vivid Cosmo Hamilton comedy of society life at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre.

Julia Marlow, the incomparable Viola of "Twelfth Night." After six years of retirement she with E. H. Southern are delighting Shakespearian audiences at the Shubert in a repertory of their favorite rôles, which includes "Twelfth Night," "Hamlet" and, this week, "The Taming of the Shrew."
Photo by White

Adelaide Mathews and Martha M. Stanley, co-authors of that delightful farce, "Nightie Night," at work on a new comedy called "The First Mrs. Shiverick," to be produced by Adolph Klauber.
Photo by Paul Thompson

"Here's looking at you," says Clyde Cook, the eccentric dancer in "Happy Days," the Hippodrome's monster musical super-spectacle. Photo by White

Despite the title, "Nothing But Love," the new musical comedy at the Lyric, the affaire du cœur of Ruby Norton and Andrew Tombes appears to be running anything but smoothly if we rightly interpret the black eye and bandaged foot of the ever present cupid, as played by Millicent Gleeman.
Photo by Apedo

Are New Yorkers wearying of jazz music? Let any doubting Thomas follow Ted Lewis and his jazziest of jazz bands nightly from the Greenwich Village Follies to the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic and hear the applause that greets his rendition of "The Vamp," that popular jazz song which is making such a big hit everywhere.

Found—at the Greenwich Village Follies—Betty Morton, one of the twenty famous artists' models, and said by James H. Abbe, photographer, to be the answer to that perplexing question—Who is the most perfect photographer's model?
Photo by Abbe