

APARTMENT HOUSE IS BEING BUILT.

"Glenada," in Brooklyn, Has No Owner and the Tenants Live Rent Free.

THINK THE IDEA GREAT FUN Mysterious Men in Doves Try to Collect the Dues, but They Have No Luck at It.

The Glenada, on Glenada place, Brooklyn, is a dorelet apartment house. The tenants pay no rent, because they don't know to whom it should go.

Harry R. Gould, it is said, owned the property. He transferred it to Charles Dougherty. It was subject to a $5,000 mortgage held by Mrs. Ella A. Hamilton.

Whoever owns the building or thinks he does not let the janitor to heat it, and also refrained from buying coal. As the tenants had no rent to pay they could well afford fuel.

They have a day watchman posted on the corner, who tries to collect the dues. A big stack of dispossess notices lies in the lobby.

None of the tenants takes the slightest notice of them. They barricade their doors against any one who looks as if he were trying to get in to take possession.

The only man who has two connected ideas of the situation is Lawyer W. W. Bunker. He thinks the Glenada is owned by Mr. Dougherty, but he isn't sure.

He also thinks that the tenants are taking an unfair advantage of the owner, and that they should deposit rent with some trust company, as a guarantee of good faith.

Thus far, it is said, men named Gould, Dougherty, Simpkins, Russell, Zobel, Murray, Oppenheimer, Johnson, Hamilton and Sugars have appeared with a copy of authority and that they owned the building or represented the owner, and wanted the rent.
