

physicians are trying hard to bring him to his senses so that he may solve the puzzling problem. There are some of the strange facts in what may prove a tragedy without a parallel. Smith is a Gentle, Miss Wechsler is the daughter of a wealthy and Jewish family. Smith has a wife and two children. The Wechsler family has long known Smith and his wife and his two children. The family has known him as an affair of the heart between Smith and the young woman. Miss Wechsler has four brothers, but none of them or her father or mother interfered in the singular attachment. A feeble protest was made now and then, that was all.

The Wife in Jeopardy. Smith received only a trifling salary for carrying the mails for the Navy yard in what was a plunger on the turf, and in every day of gambling, winning or losing, made in a day than his legitimate earnings would amount to in years. He supported his family in comfort. His wife was not aware, she says, of the attachment between him and Miss Wechsler. The Wechslers were aware of the fact that Mrs. Smith was the wife of the attorney. Not one of the family ever hinted it to her. Miss Wechsler was the banker for three of her four brothers, all of whom are grown. She took care of their savings, and had more authority in the house than any one else. She kept the books and made the social circle in which Smith and the Wechslers moved, told him that Smith had declared that he had lost everything in the world and intended to commit suicide. Rothschild, he said, treated the three as a joke, and he, too, had looked on it as a joke.

He Talked of Suicide. Smith is said to have had had luck recently. He had lost continuously for more than four months at the gaming table. Samuel Wechsler said yesterday that three weeks ago, Charles Rothschild, a member of the social circle in which Smith and the Wechslers moved, told him that Smith had declared that he had lost everything in the world and intended to commit suicide. Rothschild, he said, treated the three as a joke, and he, too, had looked on it as a joke.

Made the Attempt in a Saloon. Smith walked into the saloon at the southwest corner of Sands street and Hudson street at 7 a. m. yesterday, and was noted in his appearance by those in the saloon, two of whom were petty naval officers who knew him well. It was 10 o'clock when he went over to the lunch counter and stood leaning upon it with his elbow. One of the officers started to speak to him when he turned and fled.

Thorton declares over and over again that Smith and Miss Wechsler were in the saloon on Wednesday morning. On Thursday, before the publication of Miss Wechsler's disappearance, her brother Walter hunted for Smith. As he was what he had seen in the saloon, he said that he had seen Smith and Miss Wechsler together in the saloon on Wednesday morning. NOTICE OF THE DEATH OF A GIRL HANGED; MUST SEE A REVOLVING SIGHT OF HER OWN STATE?

A Child Frequent the Place for a Month, Then Buys Paris Green. ARRESTED JUST IN TIME.

Her Mother Says She Was Blameless Till Lured Away to "Suicide Hall."

PATRICK M'GURK TO FACE A JURY The Brother and Cashier of the Notorious John Is Held for Trial. The Police Are Sure of His Conviction.

Another sad girl graduate of McGurk's noxious dive came to the attention of the police yesterday, this time in Williamsburg. Her sobbing mother told the tale to a magistrate, and the girl was committed to the care of the Children's Society.

True to the traditions of her squalid alma mater, now known to the derelicts of the Bowery as "Suicide Hall," Alice Keefe had provided herself with poison, and was on the point of using it when she was arrested. A paper of Paris Green was found in her pocket. Those in whose custody she will remain for the present will try to learn from her what peculiar black influence lurks at No. 226 Bixby to Bill a girl after two or three visits there with a longing for death.

Alice Keefe is only fifteen. Her mother lives at No. 96 Fourth street, South Brooklyn. Tractable from childhood, she got into bad company a month ago and ran away from home. Or, rather, it was more like an abduction—which is what her mother calls it.

Under her strategy or cajolery, she was enticed to McGurk's. That chaunted her. She had no desire to return home. She feared to look in the face of her mother, or any of her relatives. It happened that she had a brother-in-law on the police force in Manhattan, and it was through his efforts that she was traced as far as McGurk's. At this time she was no longer, however, she had sunk back into an obscure part of Williamsburg, and was arrested yesterday morning at Broadway and Walton street.

Magistrate Kramer looked grave when he heard the story of the girl's abduction. McGurk's, the girl sobbed in unison with her mother. "Why did you take the poison away from me?" she cried, as the Society's agent led her away.

A WOMAN HANGED; MUST SEE A REVOLVING SIGHT OF HER OWN STATE? She Is Done to Death on the Gallows with Her Accomplice, a Man, While a Howling, Jeering Mob of Men Gloat Over the Horrible Spectacle.

THE reason the Journal gives space and prominence to the account of the hanging of Mrs. Poirier in the Province of Quebec is that the people of New York shall realize what a horror the killing of a woman is. The shadow of the slaying of a woman is over this State. Mrs. Martha Place is doomed to die during the week beginning March 20. If your flesh creeps and you avert your eyes from the story of the Canadian woman's shameful death; if the idea of a mob jeering a woman as she is dragged to the scaffold to expiate her crime makes you shudder, think of the more revolting spectacle that will shock this community unless Governor Roosevelt interferes to save Mrs. Place from death in the electric chair, and add the mite of your influence to the current that is being brought to bear on the Governor to be merciful.

ROESEL HANGED FOR SLAYING FARMER PITTS. The Condemned Man Pays the Penalty of His Crime at the Jail in Elizabeth, N. J. Louis Roesel was hanged at Elizabeth, N. J., yesterday. Only a few hours before the execution Roesel was received into the Episcopal Church by the Rev. Dr. Otis A. Glazebrook, rector of St. John's Church.

Doomed Woman's Last Night. Mrs. Poirier, when not sleeping, spent the time in prayer. She was not at all unnerved by the crowds that were allowed to gaze at her during the early part of the night. Strange as it may seem, the authorities permitted persons of both sexes to stroll along the corridor leading to the cells. Dozens of women, young and old, stood at the door of the cell and gazed at him while he paced the cell or sat with his head buried in his hands. Men of all grades of society got past the constables and gazed at the woman.

Senora Reina Charged with Bigamy. Mrs. Emma de Reina, wife of Senor Miguel Reina, of No. 107 West One Hundred and Sixth street, was arraigned before the criminal court charged with bigamy, and was presented yesterday morning. The woman surrendered voluntarily to the court. Senora de Reina was indicted for bigamy, January 28, 1897. The complaint sets forth that in October, Cuba, April 17, 1883, Senor Miguel de Reina wedded Emma Hatton, and that on October 11, 1894, before he had separated from his wife, he married William Schmitt, the son of a wealthy brewer of this city, who was traveling in Cuba.

Died in a Jersey City Car. Robert Crossley, sixty years old, of No. 11 Cambridge avenue, Jersey City, a teacher of drawing, died suddenly from a stroke of apoplexy, yesterday, at the corner of Broadway and Broadway, when he was in a car near his home, intending to go to New York, but had barely taken his seat when he fell forward to the floor.

The Crime for Which They Hanged. Mrs. Cordelia Poirier and Samuel Parslow were hanged for the murder of Isidore Poirier, the woman's husband, on November 21, 1897. The crime was committed in the Poiriers' home in St. Canute, Que. Mrs. Poirier, who was thirty-three years old, had a fair education and was the organizer of the Roman Catholic Church at St. Jerome, where Parslow sang in the choir.
