Somewhere in his interior Albert Waugh harbors a lump of delectated note paper, flavored with violet ink. He swears that he feels it there still, although a couple of days have elapsed since he made a meal of it under compulsion.

By consulting a patent medicine almanac he has learned how long it takes to digest beef, mutton, veal rabbit and other recognized articles of diet; but this authority is silent on the subject of paper and ink.

It was the go-as-you-please double century of the Empire State Wheelmen, of Brooklyn. A run it was called, but those who started soon realized that it was a race, and a hard one at that.

The riders gathered at the Bedford Road, at the intersection of Bedford and Eastern Parkways, Brooklyn, before 9 o'clock in the morning, and at 6:48 a. m. the run began.

The route was through Jamaica, along the Merrick Road, passing Valley Stream to Oakdale, where the turn was made. The riders following the same course on the return.

Before the first checking station, at Jamaica, the riders, half of the starters threw up the sponge.

Mishaps, collisions, punctures were frequent, and few even of those who survived the terrific ride escaped.

Soon after the race had begun it developed that Mrs. Benson had made elaborate arrangements for the road, tandems, triplets, quads and even a

The stranger's pockets were bulging with ornaments and $55 in bills. James Baird, who was sound asleep on the top floor of the house, identified this property as his. The burglar gave his name as Peter Diels.

DOMESTIC KINKS IN PATERNAL FAMILIES

Young Woman and Her Sister's Husband Arrested as a Result of Simultaneous Disappearance.

At the age of seventeen Addie McCarthy, of Paterson, N. J., flouted all her legitimate admirers in favor of her sister's husband, Edward Ricker, who was ten years her senior.

Since that time Mrs. Ricker has brooded over her wrongs so persistently as to become at length a hopeless invalid, while her father, Daniel McCarthy, of Montville, N. J., has searched high and low for the fugitives, threatening to kill his son-in-law on sight.

FATHER RECLAIMS HIS DAUGHTER AFTER SHE HAS BEEN ADOPTED AND REARED BY OTHERS.

She always called herself Marie Rose Aquinaldo, having no reason to doubt that she was the daughter of Jennaro Aquinaldo and his wife, of No. 167 Beach street, Paterson, N. J., who were indeed her parents to her.

Only three persons knew that her real name was Marie Rose Perenoco. They were the Aquinaldos and Alphonso Perenoco, who had with his daughter when she was an infant because he was too poor to feed her.

Perenoco had promised never to claim his child or make known her parents to her, but the lapse of time only strengthened his paternal instinct; and now, when Marie Rose is a charming maid of twelve, he has broken the agreement by demanding his daughter. The girl is just as much opposed to this as her foster parents are, and Justice Keys says that the case must go to a higher court than his.
