By John B. Foster. A home run caught over the fence is out. This point in the code of baseball ethics and jurisprudence, hitherto untouched by the Blackstones of the national game, was determined yesterday afternoon by Judge O'Day and McDonald, both agreeing in a common decision that Davis's fly was well taken by O'Brien, and that was the privilege of a fielder to mount the flagstaff in centre field, if he had such nubbion, and seize a batter.

O'Brien's Wonderful Catch. In the sixth inning, with the bases filled and one out, George Davis walked to the plate. The crowd of 8,000, clamoring, shouting souls was a tone of those exciting, enthusiastic, vociferous moods when every member of the home team is a hero and every member of the opposition a villain.

Such a spectacular exhibition as O'Brien gave has never before been seen on the Polo Grounds. There have been catches in the outfield where the fielders ran like deerhounds and caught the ball at one side, behind them or by diving in front of them. O'Brien, however, is the only man who has mounted a six-foot fence, hung by his elbows, twisted himself like a small boy making his first attempt on a horizontal bar, and pulled the ball out of the very face of an astonished bleacherite.

Davis was employed by the beard of the Prophet, by his hope to realize upon any ambition that he might have to become a future Mayor of Greater New York, by the love that he bore his fellow men to knock the ball from Coogan's piazza to Mott street.

Like the Western trapper, he did his "dunnet." He hit that ball such a rap that the noise of it was drowned by the report of the ball against the leather. The ball sped high in the air toward the right-field bleachers. Only about half a dozen of the right-field seats extend into fair ground, and when it became evident that the ball was to drop in those sacred twenty feet the cry of the crowd knew no bounds. Nor did the racket.

But a solitary figure in a dull gray uniform was making direct for the right side of the ball as a suburbanite races for the last morning train. Not one chance existed in ten thousand more or less—that Davis got it, and the crowd stood up in him in pity. Suddenly he leaped toward the fence, and springing up, seemed to hang suspended in the air for a moment. At the same time he twisted his body around and threw his hands out to one side. In this extremely awkward position he grabbed the ball and held it back to the ground, holding it in his hands.

When the crowd realized that he had actually caught the ball, the roar of the number Ningers was the rumble of number wagon compared with the mighty outburst of applause.

large fleet of yachts. There was a nice sailing breeze, and some close races in the various classes, and as is usual at this club, the regatta was handled by an efficient race committee, consisting of F. S. Doremus, Richard Outwater and Charles E. MacManus.

The feature of the day was a remarkable race in the thirty-foot class, in which four boats finished within 1 minute 36 seconds of each other. Vaquero III, Herman Duryea's boat, won, with the Wawa second and the Hera third.

Kit, a new Hanter cabin cat, owned by J. Durne, a son of ex-Alderman Durne, of Brooklyn, made her debut in the thirty-foot class, and gave the Volung a close race, in spite of defective rigging and poorly fitting canvas.

The breeze was from the east-southeast when the preparatory signal was sounded at 1 o'clock, and at 1:08 the 30-footers and yawls were started, crossing the line close together as it was a one-gun start for all classes.

Harvard started off by scoring in the first inning. Rand stroled to first. Haughton and Beale went out on high flies, and in deciding the teams were matched, and gained third on a passed ball. Scamell now made about a ready play on the bases, and wasted enough time to allow the first three to get on.

NEW YORKERS CONFIDENT. Nobody Seems to Know Who Will Act as Referee, and the Management is Bad.

By A. H. C. Mitchell. Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 29.—There was an air of expectancy at Columbia's boat house this morning that came somewhat as a surprise to the loafers and hangers on.

After three innings of loafing Harvard strengthened in the eighth. Burgess walked to first and advanced when Dean was again hit by a pitched ball. Chandler got to first, but it cost Dean his base.
