

German neutrality treaty during the period extending from 1884 to 1890, has not in the slightest degree pacified Prince Bismarck's assailants, nor has it stilled the clamor that the Government take immediate and decisive action to suppress the revelations.

There seems to be no doubt that the fall of Prince Bismarck was associated with the Emperor's denunciation of the Russo-German treaty, and His Majesty's appointment of Count Caprivi as Imperial Chancellor followed. Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria and Count Kalnoky, then Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs, had got wind of the secret convention between Prince Bismarck and the Russian Foreign Office, probably through St. Petersburg, and the Emperor feared that Germany's impudently to the Dresden would cause a rupture of the relations of the allied powers and leave Russia master of the situation. Consequently, he dismissed Bismarck, and thus cemented the alliance with Austria.

This is the semi-official interpretation of the affair in Vienna, and is generally credited here. It completely disposes of the rumors that a new friction has arisen between Germany and Austria, pointing to the non-renewal of the Triple Alliance at its expiration in May, 1897.
