

A SUBMERGED AMERICAN SUBMARINE FIRING A TORPEDO, AS SEEN FROM A UNITED STATES NAVAL SEAPLANE AT AN ELEVATION OF NEARLY 1,000 FEET. The Compressed Air from the Torpedo Tube Has Just Risen to the Surface Where It Has the Appearance of a Cloud of Steam. The Wake of the U-Boat's Periscope Also Appears Plainly.

THE CRATER OF MT. VESUVIUS AS PHOTOGRAPHED FROM A HANDLEY-PAGE AIRPLANE IN FLIGHT FROM LONDON TO CONSTANTINOPLE, the Eye of the Lens Dipping Deep Into the Huge Pit, Whose Sides Are Formed by an Immense Shell of Rigid Lava. So Far as Known This Is the First Photograph of This Character Taken from the Air. (© Underwood & Underwood.)

AN AMERICAN NAVAL PHOTOGRAPHER Using the Camera Gun from the Observer's Seat in a United States Naval Seaplane. The Surmounted Camera Is Employed Both for Registering the Results of the Machine Gun Shots and for Independent Naval Observation.

INSERT:—A PHOTOGRAPHER PERCHED ON THE NOSE OF A NAVAL SEAPLANE, AS SEEN FROM ANOTHER MACHINE FLYING OBLIQUELY ABOVE. The Camera Man's Position, Far in Advance of the Pilots, Gives Him an Extraordinary Range of Vision in Three Directions.
