

THREE POPULAR MOTION PICTURE PLAYERS

HELEN POLLOCK.

Metro.

HELEN POLLOCK is a newcomer in the films. She is the only daughter of Channing Pollock, well known as a critic and playwright. Reared in the atmosphere of the stage, Miss Pollock's film work was successful from the start. She is now appearing in a feature play with Emmy Whalen.

RICHARD BUHLER.

Lubin

RICHARD BUHLER, now leading man in Louis Reeves Harrison's war play "The Rights of Man," went on the stage first as a juvenile sixteen years ago in "Alone in London." After some years in stock and Shakespeare he created the role of Vinicius in "Quo Vadis" and later the title role in "Ben Hur." He was educated for the stage at the Washington Dramatic Institute.

LILLIAN TUCKER.

Ind.

LILLIAN TUCKER is just becoming identified with the motion picture world as an unusual interpreter of English roles. Miss Tucker's first excursion into the realm of the silent drama was in "Evidence," in which she played the part of an English lady. She was immediately cast again for a similar part in "The Mummy and the Humming Bird." Miss Tucker's greatest ambition is to play Norwegian roles.
