FIRST COMPLETE PICTURE STORY OF OUR TROOPS GOING TO THE FRENCH FRONT

Here's a regiment marching through Newport to take a train on its way to France, while—

It's prisoners, doing fatigue duty under guard, load up the shovels to dig trenches, and—

Here is the regiment all equipped and outfitted getting aboard the train where—

Waiting wives and sweethearts bid them a last good-bye as the train starts.

Soon they are waving a last good-bye—"The joy we felt at leaving camp," says the photographer, "fading as the city faded."

On shipboard, where the rules against lights were strict, taps came regularly, but—

Time was found before the danger zone was reached for frequent drills—Note the awkward squad on the left, and—

The men were kept in good spirits by concerts, vaudeville and boxing bouts between the men until—

In the danger zone, at the alarm the men assembled with life belts, overcoats and canteens, and at last—

The censor permits it to be reported that "a new contingent of American troops, with supplies has arrived in a village near the front."
