

MEAT TRUST GRABS ALL THE PROFITS.

How It Figures a Close Margin on Large Lots and Allows no Waste in Slaughter—Plans to Fight Its Methods.

The Beef Trust has always been notorious for its disregard of the rights of the people. It has measured its charges by what it considered was the utmost limit of its customers' forbearance. Even in time of war it did not hesitate to send to the nation's defenders meat that has gone down in history as "embalmed beef." This was on a par with its usual course. Nothing more nor less than might have been expected.

Every one who eats meat knows that during the last few months the price of all kinds of meat which come from the slaughter yards of the Beef Trust have been arbitrarily raised many times. The condition of the trade brought about by these practices and the utter disregard of the rights of the retailers and their customers has raised a revolt which will probably end in the creation of a slaughter house in New York City, and that will put the trust where it belongs.

The Beef Trust—composed of Armour & Co., the Chicago Packing Company, Swift & Co., and Nelson, Morris & Co., of Chicago, and Schwarzschild & Solloway, of New York City, give at many occasions as they please for the continued rise in the prices of meats.

No Waste in Slaughter.

In view of the scientific methods which they employ in the slaughtering of their animals, and because there is almost no waste, sudden and excessive boosts of price can only be accounted for legitimate reasons on the ground that the cost of the animal on the hoof has gone up proportionately in price to the Beef Trust. As a matter of fact, this year furnishes the trust no excuse of that kind.

It is most interesting—apart from any connection which it may have with the Beef Trust—to see how the buyer of live stock for the slaughter house knows just what he can do with every part of the animal after it is killed. There is no waste in the slaughter house process. These statistics show, too, how close the trust can sell and still make a good living profit. The figures to be given are official.

The lot upon which the original test was made comprised 1,162 hogs. In live weight they amounted to 279,860 pounds and their purchase and freight price was $16,202.14.

WILD "MONSTER" FIGHTS BLUECOATS.

They Pump Bullets at Him and Spoil a House Front.

"I think it must be one of those land sea serpents, whatever they are," said Policeman Shaner, of the East Fifty-first street police station, in describing to his comrades a fierce monster that he had roamed along his beat every night and tried to get behind him to eat him. According to his story the thing was as large as a man and roared like a lion. He saw it on every watch.

The other policemen laughed and advised him to put himself in the hands of a capable doctor. Shaner was made. He refused to his captain once a day that he had seen the wild thing, and every one had a laugh at his expense.

Shaner observed the creature sneaking along Fifty-eighth street, near Third avenue, at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. He put his night stick between his teeth, pulled his revolver and dug down into the lining of his helmet and got a handful of cartridges. "I'll get that thing or it shall get me," said he, "and I'll do whatever laughing is to be done in the station house at roll call."

TINY NEGRO MASCOT OF POLICE STATION

He Is a Protege of City Judge Schatz, of Mount Vernon.

In addition to three kittens which act as paper weights, because they lie on the desk at the Mount Vernon police station from morning to night, the police now have a little negro boy for a mascot.

The lad's name is William Jackson, and he says he comes from "Old Virginia," where the watermelons grow. He is ten years old, and is a protege of City Judge Adam E. Schatz, of the Mount Vernon Court of Special Sessions. Since he has been working about the station house the Judge has given orders to let him have his meals at a boarding-house, and he has been eating everything from oyster stews to fried chicken.

William was arraigned originally before the Judge for being homeless and starving. When the Judge heard he had been an inmate of the Farm School at Kenesaw and had been turned loose with a ticket to New York and had wandered about the streets starving, he decided to find something for him to do.

"What can you do?" Chief of Police Foley asked.

"Oh, I can milk cows, hoe potatoes, mow hay and eat watermelons," William answered.

Since William has been at the station house the policemen and visitors have been having great fun with him. Several wanted to look at his teeth to determine his actual age, while one man called him a "big fellow."

"This is more than I can stand," said Jackson, pulling off his coat. He wanted to fight right away.

The boy was taken to the Fifth Avenue Theatre at Mount Vernon by Policeman Atwell. This was the first time he had ever seen the interior of a theatre, and as soon as he saw the stage, the footlights, and the actresses he exclaimed, "I say, mister, is dis heaven?"

WILSON'S WEEP FOR "GRANDMA" JONES.

She Endears Herself to Them and Then Died, No One Knowing Who She Was.

"Grandma" Jones is dead, and within a considerable radius of her home, in the big tenement at No. 5 Lewis street, her demise is sorely mourned.

A little old woman came to the house several weeks ago and engaged a small room from Mrs. McGilinsky. She was very poor, but it was evident that her experience had included far better days. She kept to herself, but every time she went out the children loved to gather about her to hear her kindly voice. The child honored with a commission to do some small errand for her was envied by its fellows.

"Grandma" Jones fell ill yesterday, and from the scanty stores of the poor, all around little comforts were brought in the hope that she might be nursed back to life. These were vain, for she sank rapidly and yesterday died of heart disease. Her neighbors, who had gained in part her confidence, said it was truly heart trouble—the memory of sons and daughters gone before, leaving her alone in her old age among strangers. Mrs. Griffin, of No. 25 Cannon street, said she would give the body a Christian burial.

"Grandma" Jones was seventy-eight years old. She was a widow, but for how long or whence she came she never told anybody.

DELIVER TAKES A MILK BATH.

Charles Fisher, of No. 514 West Forty-sixth street, a driver employed by the Boston Milk Company, while driving in East Thirty-fourth street early yesterday morning, attempted to turn the corner at First avenue while going too rapidly, and his wagon was upset. Fisher was buried under his milk cans, which were piled over him. One of his hands was severely lacerated. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

DON'T TAKE DYING MEN.

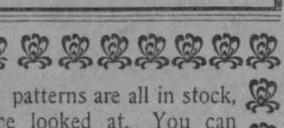

Policeman Benjamin, of the Charles street station, found Peter Smith, sixty years old, a homeless man, at Horatio and Hudson streets. He called an ambulance from St. Vincent's Hospital. The surgeon diagnosed the case as consumption in its last stages, and declined to take the patient.

Benjamin then called an ambulance from Bellevue, and the dying man was taken there. He was unable to give any information about himself except his name.
